

Though I have nothing revolutionary to say, I believe that it is important to have a voice in something that I feel so strongly about. While I realize that those in the power of making decisions will do so in a very educated and professional manner, I only hope that these decisions reflect the views of the public as opposed to those with power. The media surrounds us all; there is no escaping it. As much as we may try to fight it, the fact of the matter is that the media is shaping our lives whether we like it or not. And should deregulation occur, I feel that in a matter of a few short years, our lives will be dictated by just a small handful of corporations. The corruption that surrounds us in this country is undeniable. While deregulation may seem like a good idea, Clear Channel Communications exemplifies how one company can ruin an industry. If any changes are to be made, I strongly suggest that regulations be tightened.
